

Day 2

Greetings from the RYG activity centre. Today has seen us endure some classic Welsh weather; if you like wind and rain, this is undoubtedly the place for you. Ever the optimistic group of adventurers, our activities today have been as daring as they were contrasting. Half of us headed to the beach to practice our scrambling, whilst the other group conquered the mountain. For those who didn't pay attention in Geography, a mountain is legally over 600m above sea level. The children climbed Moel-Yr-hydd (moyl-uh-heeth if you want to practise your pronunciation), a towering monstrosity of around 650m. It was a fairly quick climb for groups A and C, who made short work of the mountain, only to be rewarded with near-freezing temperatures at the top and strong winds. Having climbed for a couple of hours, they enjoyed lunch at the top before a quick and slippery descent. The children seemed to enjoy sliding down the slopes, Savannah particularly quickly demonstrating her tumbling ability to great effect. The group returned, washed off, and enjoyed early showers before spending their (your) hard-earned money in the RYG shop.

Tomorrow promises to be better weather that may lead to kayaking during the day, amongst other activities, In the evening, they get to take over the local swimming pool in Bala.
